A SELF GUIDED WALKING TOUR

Did you know...?

Although "a million blooms" is often used as the description of the garden's spring season, the blossoms currently on display surely must be equal in number. The crape myrtles, day lilies, and oakleaf hydrangeas are all shouting for attention and with their large dramatic blooms they all deserve it.

However, the vibrant display extends beyond the triumvirate listed above. Gardeners wishing to add a vine to their plantings might want to view the Lonicera sempervirens, trumpet honeysuckle, which is in full bloom, twining around one of the original gate posts to the property. To view it circle the path around the Flagler Garden until you arrive at the sign for the Woodland Walk. Look toward the drive and the small but bold coral red flowers with yellow throats will shout hello. These flowers are not fragrant but they do attract hummingbirds, and the vine continues to bloom up into the fall. The leaves are an attractive blue-green. Although sempervirens means evergreen this only holds for Zone 8 and warmer. In Richmond it is semi-evergreen.

This vine is a native to the southeastern US. Although one source states "It has a slow ability to spread through seed production and the seedlings have medium vigor..." the L. sempervirens currently twining on my picket fence was planted by a bird and has been blooming vigorously there for over 10 years.
